So what is next for you in your career? Are you happy where you are, doing what you do, in your current accountabilities? Are you producing thrilling results? Having read these questions, you might be saying to yourself, “well it depends on the company the economy, yada yada yada” What if you had the ability to cause the results in your career that you really want, what then would be possible for you that is not currently possible?

Sadly, many people are not thrilled with their current work situation and, many are resigned to thinking that it is “just the way it is.” For many environmental professionals, like others, you probably did not enter the field of study or profession for “just a job.” There was a sense of purpose, passion, and possibilities before you. If you want to reclaim that same sense of control with respect to your career, you will need to take an honest look at what is at stake for you, understand what is possible for you, and have a plan to change the results. Get a start by attending this breakfast meeting featuring Thomas Rhoads, a well known career consultant in the Philadelphia area.
